Al Held, Plaza 7 – 1993, Watercolor on paper mounted on board, 49 x 67 inches

David Klein Gallery, 163 Townsend Street, Birmingham, Michigan is pleased to announce the opening of Al Held: WATERCOLORS. In lieu of an opening reception, an open house will take place on March 21, from 12pm to 7pm.

Al Held (1928-2005), already an established American abstract painter, started making watercolors in 1988 after he purchased a home in Camerata di Todi, Italy. The watercolors, with their intense color and pure geometry, are an intimate, contemporary response to the great 14th and 15th Century Renaissance paintings that surrounded him in Italy. Held used to speak of the “sheer sensuous joy” of pulling a wet brush across paper and his painting process was unique. He would wet the large sheets of paper first and then wrap the moist paper around a board attaching the edges to the board with staples. This is very similar to the way artists traditionally stretch a canvas, and it prevented the paper from warping or wrinkling. Held would apply layer over layer of wet color over dry, glazing and re-glazing, until he achieved the color and density he desired. By using this technique, he was able to create a richly stained surface of crystalline luminosity.

Al Held was a leading American abstract painter. Held had his first exhibition in New York City in 1956 and exhibited regularly until his death in 2005. His work in the 1950s, called Pigment Paintings, mirrored the work of many of the Abstract Expressionistic painters. By the 1960s he had developed his own visual language of hard-edges, geometric abstraction. Held was always dissatisfied with two-dimensional space and in his later work, he was able to masterfully create the illusion of depth and movement on a flat canvas. The lyrical geometry of the Luminous Constructs paintings anticipate the pulsing, impossible landscape of the virtual realm. They explore a space that seems to hail simultaneously from the art historical past and the digital future.
