...I had that familiar conviction that life was beginning over again with the summer.
-Nick Carraway, The Great Gatsby

After long winters bereft of sunshine and rainy spring days the annual arrival of summer brings a return to color with bright blue skies, vibrant gardens, brilliant sunsets, and a certain kind of light unique to the season. It is the best of times.

We celebrate the season and life refreshed with a selection of work from eight artists employing color in a multitude of ways. This summer begins again with Susan Goethel Campbell's Lost City woodblock prints in layered hues of green and blue, Cooper Holoweski's playful compositions with their purple and pink auras and Lauren Semivan's painterly photographs in shades of red and pink.

Sylvain Malfroy-Camine, Rome – 2021

Matthew Hawtin's minimalist collages of red, yellow, black and grey offer a subtle conversation on line and form and Mitch Cope's large-scale tondo, Yellow Rose Moon, draws us into its buttery warmth. Sylvain Malfroy-Camine's bright pointillist canvases are joyfully reminiscent of impressionist painting and provide an alternative use of color to Ben Pritchard's richly layered abstractions.

This summer, more than ever, we welcome a return to color and the best of times.

Mitch Cope, New Rose Moon - 2021
